

Temporary Worker Housing

June 2014

The Temporary Worker Housing (TWH) Program works to protect the health and safety of migrant farmworkers and their families by ensuring the living environments provided meet state health and safety standards.

The TWH program has brought about positive change in the condition and amount of migrant farmworker housing available throughout Washington. Since 2005, the number of licensed housing sites and their occupants has doubled to about 236 and 14,600 respectively, improving the living conditions of migrant farmworkers and their family members.

Services

The TWH program offers services to farmworkers, farmers, housing operators, developers:

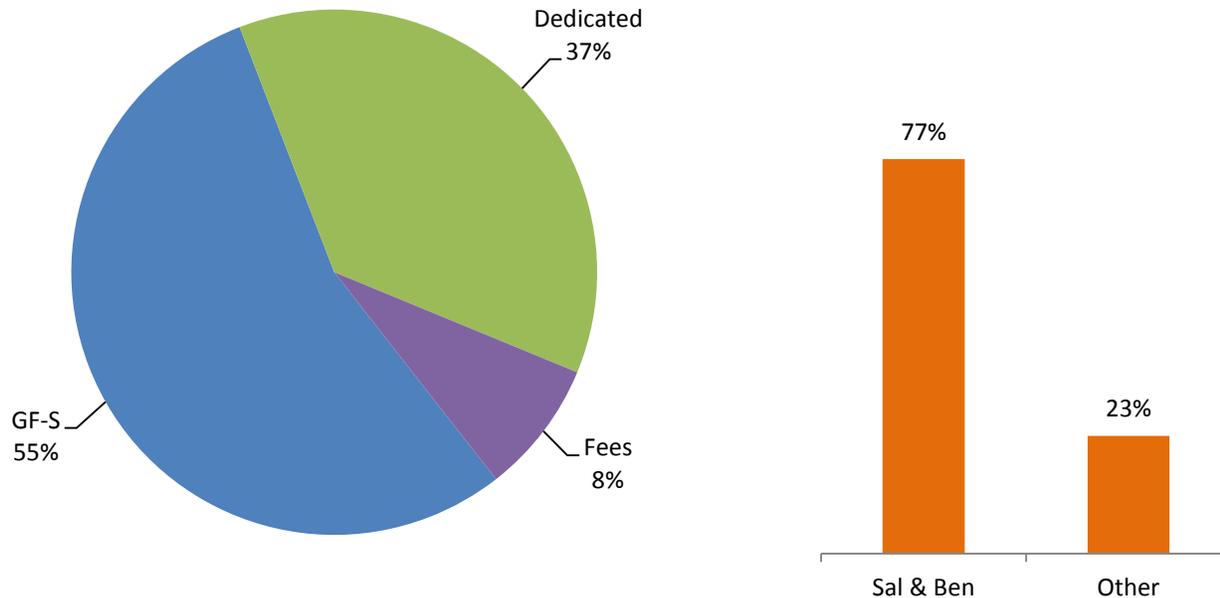

- Consultation to growers, other housing operators, development organizations and agencies, to encourage and assist with development of migrant farmworker housing;
- Comprehensive building department services for an efficient, feasible construction process;
- Licensing to assure housing meets state standards;
- Inspection services to attain and maintain a system of compliance, assuring health and safety standards;
- Investigation and enforcement - making sure housing is safe for farmworkers and their families, and holding housing operators accountable;
- Collaboration with local jurisdictions and community organizations representing growers, farmworkers, and developers to encourage development of safe housing;
- Distribution of bilingual educational materials on flu, West Nile virus, and other information.
