Meals & Snacks
Promote Healthy Practices During COVID-19

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the Washington State Department of Health released guidance for early learning programs to limit the spread of COVID-19. Find a short summary of the guidance below. (Click the links above for the full guidance.)

Tips for serving meals and snacks
- Serve them in the program space. Prevent large group gatherings.
- Stagger mealtimes and create space between groups when serving in a large lunchroom or dining hall.
- Space children as far apart as you can at the table. Make sure tables are at least 6 feet apart.
- Consider having children take their meals outside.
- Get rid of family-style and buffet meals. The provider should handle utensils and plate the food to make sure children are not sharing food with each other.

Foster Healthy Eating, Learning and Development
- Be present when children are eating. Praise children for trying new or less-preferred foods. Maintain social distancing and model healthy eating.
- Talk with children about what they are eating. Talk about taste, smell, feel, color, shape, texture, where the food comes from or how it’s grown.
- Use mealtimes to help children learn their signs of hunger and fullness. Use the terms “hungry” and “full”. Let children decide how much or how little to eat.
- Use a curriculum like Grow It, Try It, Like It or Harvest for Healthy Kids to include foods and healthy eating in lessons and activities.
- Encourage children to try new foods using these phrases that help and hinder from MyPlate.
- Serve foods that meet the Child and Adult Care Food Program meal pattern standards (this is also WAC 110-300-0185).
