Welcome to the first edition of the Washington State Board of Naturopathy’s newsletter. It is our hope that this newsletter will improve communication between the board and licensed naturopathic physicians in Washington, as well as inform the public and the profession on issues related to the practice of naturopathic medical practice.

We have included topics that the board is – and has been – working on, including clarification of protected terms and the new proposed continuing education requirements. We have also included statistics on the sanctions the board has taken. Much discussion went into this last point. Part of our charge is public reporting and all final actions are a matter of public record; however, we have elected to report the totals over time, rather than by name (as the medical and dental commissions do in their newsletters).

We hope you find this newsletter beneficial, and we welcome feedback and suggestions of topics that you — the license holders in Washington — would be interested in seeing in future newsletters.

The mission of the Board of Naturopathy (board) is to protect the public health and enhance patient safety and the integrity of the naturopathic physician profession through licensing, disciplinary action, rulemaking, and education. The board’s purpose is to establish, monitor, and enforce qualifications for licensure, consistent standards of practice, and continuing competency. Rules, policies, and procedures developed by the board promote the delivery of quality healthcare to people in Washington. The board values collaborative partnerships with other boards, commissions, agencies, and organizations.

How to avoid a complaint: Communicate and document all communication and treatment provided or recommended. These actions alone may not prevent a complaint being filed but will assist the board when evaluating whether a violation of law has occurred. Know your law.

CLARIFICATION ON PROTECTED TERMS

The Board of Naturopathy (board) recently received inquiries about what services or procedures a naturopathic physician may and may not perform. In addition, we have had inquiries about what services for which a naturopathic physician may and may not advertise. At the board’s direction, this notice was prepared to help naturopathic physicians navigate these tricky waters.

Terms you may not use are those that are protected in another health profession’s practice act; for example, the term “massage therapist” is protected under RCW 18.108.030(1) so you must hold a massage therapist license in order to refer to yourself as such. Additional protected terms in that statute include, but are not limited to, “massage practitioner,” “massagist,” “masseuse,” “touch therapist,” and “massage technician.”

You may, however, advertise and provide any service that is specifically listed in your scope of practice; for example, the term “physical modalities” is listed in the scope of practice statute for naturopathic physicians (RCW 18.36A.040). That term is defined in RCW 18.36A.020(12) as including “massage.” So you may advertise and provide massage service.

Another example is “counseling.” A number of regulated health professions are in the mental health area, such as “mental health counselor,” “certified counselor,” or “agency affiliated counselor,” to name a few. Providing counseling services is in the scope of naturopathic practice. In RCW 18.36A.040 it’s referred to as “suggestion,” which is defined in RCW 18.36A.020(15) as meaning “techniques including but not limited to counseling, biofeedback, and hypnosis.”

The scope of naturopathic practice law (RCW 18.36A.040) states, 'No person licensed under this chapter may employ the term ‘chiropractic’ to describe any services provided by a naturopath under this chapter.” In some form or another, this same exclusion language is in almost every health profession’s practice act.

So in summary, if you have a question about what you may do or what you may include in any advertising, look first to your own practice act (chapter 18.36A RCW). If it’s listed there, you’re safe. If not, check other similar professions’ practice acts; they are among the professions listed under Title 18 of the Revised Code of Washington (RCW).
