Certified counselors and certified advisers act according to state law, Department of Health rules, and codes of ethics of their professional organizations.

An advisory committee, made up of two certified counselors, two registered hypnotherapists, and three public members, meets quarterly to provide advice to Department of Health.

The committee welcomes the public to attend these meetings. Contact the Department of Health for meeting information.

The Health Systems Quality Assurance Division within Department of Health has information on all health care professionals in the state. This information includes credential status and current restrictions or disciplinary actions, since July of 1998.

If you have a question about a provider, contact Department of Health.

What You might Expect From a Certified Counselor or Certified Adviser

Your certified counselor or certified adviser is required by law to provide you with a disclosure statement, that should contain the following information:

- Name and business contact information
- Washington state credential number
- Education, training, and experience.
- Description of the types of counseling or therapeutic orientation.

They should:

- Inform you of the costs of your treatment, billing practices, and how your records are maintained.
- Give you the opportunity to discuss matters of confidentiality, privacy, and release of information.
- Assist you in referrals to other professionals, if necessary or requested.
- Treat you with respect and dignity.

Once signed and dated by you and your certified counselor or certified adviser, the disclosure statement is kept as part of your counseling record.

Remember: Your involvement in developing goals, requesting a change in approach to counseling, or in decisions about termination of services is encouraged.

Certified Counselors or Certified Advisers provide counseling services dealing with issues related but not limited to:

- Gaining awareness and achieving sensitivity of self and others.
- Discovering and building on strengths/abilities.
- Gaining a stronger sense of self-confidence.
- Gaining a stronger sense of resiliency in dealing with life’s challenges and changes.
- Coping with grief and loss.

As with all counseling services, we encourage you to:

- Determine the best fit for you, your children, or your family
- Review the personal disclosure statement of the counselor or adviser you are considering.
- Ask questions about your particular situation

There are many professionals in the State of Washington that provide counseling services. For additional information on certified counselors and certified advisers go to: Counselors.

- 36 hours of continuing education every two years, with six hours of law and ethics, and three hours of suicide assessment, screening, and referral.

Confidentiality and Health Care Information Access and Disclosure

Your certified counselor or certified adviser will create records about your counseling sessions. Your counselor or adviser should have a clear procedure to maintain confidentiality of your records. You have the right to expect that anything you tell your certified counselor or certified adviser will be held in confidence with but not limited to the following exceptions:

- If you are involved in a civil or criminal lawsuit, a judge can order your file be turned over to the court
- If you make statements that a child, elderly, or disabled person has been abused or neglected, law requires your counselor or adviser to report that information to the appropriate authorities
- If you make statements that indicate you intend to harm yourself or others, your counselor or adviser may report that information to the appropriate authorities

Other circumstances may include inquiries from your insurance company or consulting with other healthcare providers. You will be asked to sign an authorization for release of information about your sessions. You should be informed of the reason for such disclosures and are encouraged to ask questions about anything that is unclear to you, prior to signing this authorization.

Maintaining a Professional Relationship

Your relationship with your certified counselor or certified adviser should be professional in nature. Counseling may include discussing the most private aspects of your life and relationships. It is your therapist’s or counselor’s responsibility to provide an atmosphere of trust and respect.

Counseling often deals with difficult and emotional issues. There may be a time when you feel confused or troubled by something that occurs during counseling. You are encouraged to talk about this with your counselor or adviser so that you may gain more clarity. If you don’t feel the issue has been resolved you may wish to get a second opinion.
