Opportunity

In 2013, the Kalispel Tribe of Indian’s child care center, the Camas Early Learning Center, enrolled in Start Healthy Start Now (SHSN) to improve children’s health by training the child care center staff who care for them. SHSN, a federally-funded initiative, was launched by Inland Northwest Health Services with 21 regional partners, including Spokane Regional Health District, Community Minded Enterprises and Empire Health Foundation, to address obesity challenges in six eastern Washington counties.

The goal of SHSN was to increase healthy eating, physical activity and the awareness of adverse childhood experiences by providing training to teachers, cooks and directors of child care centers. The initiative not only provided useful training, but helped fulfill annual professional development hours in the State Training and Registry System (STARS) for the center staff.

Action

As part of Start Healthy Start Now:

- Cooks were trained on whole foods cooking, including learning knife skills, making homemade soup stock and using whole grains such as quinoa and legumes like lentils.
- Staff members were engaged in learning creative and brain development physical activities for the children. The training was based on “Let’s Move Child Care,” a six-step national program that provides obesity prevention resources and trainings for early learning programs.
- Staff members were also trained on child behavior and development, gaining new knowledge and skills to help children in their care.

Impact

No one expected the transformation that took place in the lives of the staff and the children at Camas Early Learning Center. “We have changed everything about our cooking... It was a dramatic change for the kids. It's good for the kids, but it is good for the adults too,” said the cook, Shannon Fitzmorris. With new and more physical activities, the teachers have seen changes in the children too. “The younger ones nap better and wake with more stamina. The older ones are more open to being active and joining games or inventing games during ‘choice’ time,” said Alice Moran, physical education teacher.

The center now hosts healthier celebrations and supports changes to improve the health of staff members, such as starting a break time walking club.

“We are all in this together. I like being a part of a group that has a goal and a vision, and we put our heads together to make things happen,” said Ms. Moran.
