Covenants for Group B public water supply protection

Washington State drinking water rules require public water suppliers to protect public drinking water sources. According to the rules, the person who owns or operates a public water system must provide a sanitary control area around wells. The rules prohibit any activity that could contaminate the drinking water source in the sanitary control area.

The required sanitary control area is a radius of 100 feet for wells. The Department of Health may change these distances based on an evaluation of hydro-geological conditions and other factors. Water system owners or operators use covenants to ensure no source of contamination will be constructed, stored, discarded, or applied within the sanitary control area.

What is a covenant?
A covenant is a written promise, agreement, or restriction. When applied to public water systems, a covenant is a recorded agreement of the activities and practices prohibited near a particular water source. The purpose of the covenant is to prevent contamination of the water source.

Water suppliers cannot rely upon the authority of state or local agencies to exclude potential sources of contamination in the sanitary control area.

The water system owner or operator is responsible for:
- Declaring or obtaining the covenant(s).
- Recording the covenant in the records office in the county where the property is located.

Two types of covenants protect public water sources
1. Declaration of Covenant: Used when the water supplier owns the property within the sanitary control area.
2. Restrictive Covenant: Used when someone other than the water supplier owns all or part of the property in the sanitary control area.

In some cases, the water supplier may need both types of covenants to protect the water source.

How to establish a covenant
Be sure to use the instructions and sample covenants on the following pages together. "Sections" refer to various portions of the covenant(s) you must complete. See the examples for notes on these sections.
Declaration of covenant
When the water supplier owns all or part of the area in the sanitary control area, you should complete a Declaration of Covenant. You must record the completed form in the county where the property is located.

See Example 1 for a completed Declaration of Covenant. Here’s how to complete Sections A and B:

Section A – Fill in the legal description of the property on which the water source is located. The description should be specific.

You can provide long or complex legal descriptions as an attachment filed with the covenant. If you do, you should refer to those attachments in Section A.

Section B – This section refers to the precise location of the drinking water source on the property described in Section A. We recommend you prepare a map showing the location of the well or spring on the property. Attachment A is an example of a map showing the location of a well on a property. Be sure to attach your map to the Declaration of Covenant when you record it.

Restrictive covenants
When someone other than the water supplier owns portions of the sanitary control area, you must obtain a Restrictive Covenant from that landowner. You must record the Restrictive Covenant in the county where the property is located.

The water supplier should have the owner of the adjacent property fill out the enclosed Restrictive Covenant. See Example 2. Sections C and D are explained below.

Section C – This section refers to the owner that is granting the restrictive covenant. That is, the property next to the parcel where the water source is located. The legal description of the neighboring parcel should be written here.

Section D – This section references the property where the water source is actually located. Both the description of the property and the water source's location on the property should be written here. The description should be specific. We recommend you use a map to show the location of the source on the water supplier’s property relative to the adjacent property. Be sure to attach the map to the Restrictive Covenant when you record it. See Attachment A for an example.
